CHAPTER I

INTRODUCTION

THE SOUTHSIDE

The title chosen for this work, makes appropriate some explanation of what is meant by "The Southside."

The Southside is territory on the south side of James River but exactly what area is referred to when the term is used is not always clear. A recent writer says: "That section of Virginia which lies south of the James River and east of the Blue Ridge Mountains is popularly known as the Southside; but the designation is often restricted to a smaller area, excluding the tidewater and upland counties, and sometimes also to the northern counties of this region." [1]

Obviously this is a little general; and it is doubtful if the area thus designated is "popularly" known as the Southside. It is questionable, at least, whether the extreme eastern and western portions of that area are popularly regarded as a part of the Southside.

Desiring to develop with as much precision as was reasonably possible the facts in the case as to the extent and location of the section known as the Southside, the writer addressed identical inquiries on the subject to Dr. Philip Alexander Bruce, Honorable William Cabell Bruce, Dr. John Tyler, Honorable Armistead C. Gordon and Dr. Joseph D. Eggleston, and requested them to give him their understanding of the term.

While there was substantial agreement among them, there was variation enough to make it clear that hitherto the section referred to by the term Southside has not had precise and definite metes and bounds. The following are the interesting views of these distinguished authorities as given in the receipt of their responses to the writer's inquiries.

[1] Wilmer L. Hall, Introduction to Watson's Notes on Southside 5.

Honorable William Cabell Bruce said:

"The territory usually described as Southside Virginia lies both southside of the James River and the northern boundary of North Carolina so far as its northern and southern boundaries are concerned. Approximately speaking, its western boundary might, in my judgment, be said to be a straight line drawn southwardly from the mouth of the Appomattox River to the northern boundary of North Carolina just south of Danville; and approximately speaking, its eastern boundary might, in my judgment, be a straight line drawn southwardly from the mouth of the Appomattox River to the northern boundary of North Carolina.

"Senator Swanson, of Virginia, lives at Chatham, in Pittsylvania County, Virginia, on the line of the Southern Railway north of Danville, from my intercourse with him that he would be quick to resent the fact that he is not a Southsider; and John Randolph, who was born near the mouth of the Appomattox, in Prince George County, Virginia, and resided for a part of his life at Roanoke, in Charlotte County, Virginia, described himself, on one occasion, as I remember at this moment, as a 'moderate Southsider'." [2]

The Southsider as thus described would embrace practically all of Campbell County, about half of Pittsylvania County, and all the territory eastward thereof, south of James River, to a line drawn southwardly from the mouth of the Appomattox River to the North Carolina line. A line so drawn would split the counties of Prince George, Sussex and Southampton, and embrace in the Southside, approximately a third of Prince George, half of Sussex and the western corner of Southampton.

Upon the definition of the term, Dr. Eggleston wrote:

The term 'Southside Virginia' is interpreted differently, but the prevailing definition is that it takes the counties south of the James as far west as Lynchburg, and the counties south of the James as far east as Petersburg, but including Prince George and Sussex.

"This would mean Campbell, Pittsylvania and Halifax; Ap-Brunswick, Greensville, Prince George and Sussex. Certainly all middle counties between Lynchburg and Petersburg are unmistakably Southside." [3]

The inquiry addressed to Dr. Philip Alexander Bruce reached him; he was ill, but he very kindly requested his daughter to answer for

"He asks me," she writes, "to say that as you know, the Southside runs off into neighboring counties, but it has always been his impression that it runs from Pittsylvania inclusive to Dinwiddie inclusive -- even though the two are somewhat shadowy." [4]

This description would exclude Prince George and Sussex or at least part of Sussex. The eastern boundary line of the Southside, according to the view might be drawn from City Point and Hopewell, to Petersburg, to embrace Petersburg in the Southside, then with the eastern boundary of Dinwiddie County, and with the Atlantic Coast Line Railway to Staunton and Jarratt, and from that point following the Greensville County line to the point where Meherrin River crosses the Virginia-North Carolina

Mr. Gordon wrote:

"So far as I am aware 'The Southside' or 'Southside Virginia,' is a popular term, and incapable of exact definition. I think . . . that the expression means generally the territory in Virginia south of the line north of the North Carolina line, though it is not used in connection with the extreme eastern or western counties of that territory." [5]

In Dr. Tyler's response he said:

"I have never seen the Southside defined, but I take it to mean the counties between the James and the North Carolina line as far as the line is drawn from the Falls of the James to the North Carolina line," but that in his opinion the line should be so drawn as to embrace in the Southside the counties of Nanse-

PURPOSE OF THE WORK

The genealogical and historical source material of the South: scarcely been touched, so far as making its substance available: concerned. As to Lunenburg County, a start has been made in The State and Cumberland Parish, the author's previous volumes. But much material to be added to these before the field for that county can be said to have been covered. The present volume is intended a modest addition supplementing the source material of those volumes.

If other volumes are added (as may or may not be the case, depending upon many contingencies), it will be the purpose to present material in the sense that, in the main, it has never heretofore been printed.

To start with the Lists of Tithes of Lunenburg County seems very appropriate, for this county as a parent county originally embracing territory now comprised in ten counties; and the available lists before any subdivision of the county took place are basic source material for the study of origins, for an expansive domain indeed.

A principal object of the writer, in collating, copying, abstracting and printing this material is to make such contribution as he may, should it be, to the preservation of the subject matter of records which are of historical and genealogical viewpoints invaluable, and which are of disintegration through the inevitable effect of time; and which are moreover, in constant danger of possible loss by fire, or some other calamity. The deprivation of records already lost in various counties of Virginia, by such means as accidental fires and wanton destruction by invading soldiers in the period 1861 to 1865, make but too plain the irreparable nature of such losses.

But this work is not designed only to help preserve such records; it is hoped it may facilitate the work of researchers.

If a genealogist were asked to outline an ideal arrangement of source material for his use in making searches for the histories of early generations of Virginia families, it may be imagined that he would desire other things, like to have these:

An arrangement of the data, in the chronological order of the events of the country, with the counties listed in the order of their creation.

The records of, or relating to those counties, arranged in groups.

likewise assembled in chronological order, and indexed, or otherwise classified for ready reference.

Such records would embrace, among others: Lists of the inhabitants as might be secured from a census, if any were taken, and if not, lists of tithes or of the tax-paying inhabitants, with names of "overseers," and others whose names might appear; lists of marriages of births and deaths; lists of those who held offices, civil or military; lists of those making deeds; and lists of all persons making wills, names of all beneficiaries, and their relationship, respectively to the testator, and lists of administrations and settlements of estates: where wills were made.

Such records, for all counties, printed and assembled in a single library, such as we can imagine the State Library of Virginia might be, would be a near paradise for the researcher. But collecting, archiving, printing and making available such records, on any such comprehensive scale, may never be achieved; certainly it will not be done during any reasonable time, which can now be envisaged. An undertaking of such character requires a volume of financial resources, a systematic organization over a number of years, and the services of a numerous and well-trained staff, such as it is not only not practicable now to attempt, but, so far as this writer knows, never has been seriously considered.

It has been impossible, in the nature of the case, for research and the publication of ancient records to proceed upon any exact, systematic and scientific plan. Our historical and genealogical societies, the Virginia Historical Society and the Virginia State Library have done much in this field, and what they have done, has been, in the main, more systematically than that resulting from the independent and uncoordinated efforts of individuals who have made contributions of material, and from their labors in this general field. These later, while valuable and interesting, have been, at times tantalizing. Thus, for example, in certain sections we have had presented the publication of a list of bonds for a given time, but from that section we may have no wills; in another section we may have the publication of abstracts of wills; in lists of marriages. Moreover, such publications have followed no order of seniority; those for newer sections may precede those for older parts of the country, and appear at random from widely separated parts of the country. And few are the sections for which there have been publications covering any considerable period, records which give lists of re-lists of those who married, lists of those who made wills, and of persons mentioned in the wills, etc. Yet, it is apparent, that to such groups of data covering definite periods, for particular sections makes possible a fuller use, a better identification and correlation [sic] of material than can be otherwise accomplished.

Virginia, as a State, has expended, relatively speaking, very much upon the preservation and publication of her priceless records. No state has such a history, no other state has records of such real value, for no other state contributed so much to the founding and growth of a great commonwealth of states; no other has done so much for freedom of thought, of religion; and of political action; no other contributed so much to the creation of the sentiments which produced the Declaration of Independence. No other contributed so much to the securing of our independence; and no other had so large and important a part in the framing of the Constitution and founding a Constitutional Union; and no other has suffered more from the selfish ingratitude of an ungenerous majority of the states.

Comparing what Virginia has done, in the preservation, printing and making available the contents of her great treasure house of records, with what some of the newer and more materially prosperous states have done, cannot avoid the observation that the states with the abundance of financial resources to devote to such purposes do not have the records and traditions to preserve; while Virginia with an unmatched abundance of traditions and of records has not enjoyed since the war of 1861 such a degree of prosperity as to enable her to do, what otherwise in happier circumstances might have been done.

But to pen these lines is not to unduly censure the mother state; she has been the victim of circumstances, beyond her control. From an early day, as an agricultural state, she has been the victim of an economic system the inevitable results of which Mr. Jefferson and others clearly pointed out; while since the War between the States she has not only struggled against that system, but against the devastating effects of that war and worse still, the effects of the Era of Loot and Bribe, which even the name "Carpet-baggery" euphonesously [sic] describes.

A century is a short time within which to overcome and to rectify the effects of such a conjunction and combination of malign policies; long continued measures in keeping them in effect.

As time goes by there will be, doubtless, improvement in the publication of Virginia's priceless records. We may confidently expect at least a substantial increase in the volume, and a better group of such material made available in print. But the regret of those keenly interested in such sources is that such measures are not material enough. Moreover, what remains of much invaluable material is gradually disappearing, and where not disappearing, is relatively difficult and expensive to consult and explore.

Under these circumstances, every transfer to the printed page of information contained in ancient documents and files, thus assuring its preservation, may be regarded as a service not only to the present but to the future -- one which will be of greater and greater value as time recedes into the past.

In the course of his researches in the preparation of his forthcoming The Old Free State, the author discovered, or probably it would be more accurate to say, became painfully aware of, the great extent of loss of valuable records which have occurred, even in those counties which have not suffered such holocaustic calamity as the destruction of their records by fire. Thus, for example, in such counties as Amelia, Lunenburg, Mecklenburg, where many records are complete from the beginnings of the counties, and where presumably all records should be complete, many are nevertheless missing, and this despite the fact that in recent years they have been cared for with the greatest diligence which the circumstances permit.

A knowledge of such facts, and of the physical condition of many of our ancient documents which remain -- in some cases, fragile to the point of disintegration, and faded almost to the point of illegibility -- has led to a desire to do something to help to save their substance for posterity.

THE TITHES

The lists of tithes of Lunenburg County for the earlier years are a unique inheritance, as such records in many of the counties have not survived. Lists for 1748, 1749, 1750, 1751, 1752, 1764, 1769, 1774, 1775, 1776 and 1783 are embraced herein.

Lunenburg County originally embraced all of the territory from the County westward to the top of the Blue Ridge Mountains and from

Carolina line, northward to the divide between the waters of the Roanoke Rivers.[7]

The first loss of territory from the original area, occurred : February, 1752, when Halifax County was created.[8] It is therefore fact that the lists of tithes for 1748, 1749, 1750 and 1751, embrace tax paying population of that great section, which now constitute following counties: Lunenburg, Mecklenburg, Halifax, Charlotte, Pittsylvania, Henry, Patrick, Franklin, practically all of Bedford, Campbell and a considerable part of Appomattox.

It is a fortunate circumstance that all the lists for the early 1748,[9] 1749 and 1750 are available. They present the earliest record, or census, known of the taxable residents of the far-flung of the ancient county, embracing as it

[7] The Old Free State, I, 136-7.

[8] Hening, VI, 252; The Old Free State, I, 139.

[9] For the ability to present abstracts of all the list of tithes for 1748, the author is indebted to Mr. Curtis Bynum, of Asheville, North Carolina. Both Mr. Yates, the Clerk, and the writer had made searches for the lists, but had discovered only two of them. Subsequently Mr. Bynum, a patient, persistent, painstaking investigator, and tax analyst, found the remainder of the lists, and called them to the writer's attention.

did then, what is now the whole or the greater part of ten counties.

The ancestral origins of countless thousands of persons, particularly the newer parts of the United States run back to this section and are found in these records.

It could, with an imposing array of facts and reasons, be maintained that this great section has been the mediate or immediate source of a great array of initiative, enterprise, daring, talent, ability, culture, and of men of superior quality and character, in as great and in as great a variety of fields of human endeavors, as any other of similar size in America; and it would be scarcely possible to make such an assertion.

The interesting character and inherent qualities of those who from the region are indicated by such facts, as that thirteen persons within this area became Governors of States other than Virginia; persons born within the ancient domain of Lunenburg became United States Senators from other States, [11] while twenty-three persons born in the region served in Congress from not less than seventeen States, scattered throughout the Union from Alabama, Georgia and North Carolina on the one hand, and Illinois and Washington on the other. [12]

As the author said in his former work: [13]

"To call the roll of these native sons who attained to positions of importance and honor in other states, naturally suggests an inquiry of a broader scope. If the emigrants from the area of ancient Lunenburg, and their impression in new localities, and amid strange surroundings, can be said of the scope of the influence of the descendants of other Lunenburgers who cast their lots in other states and have taken part in the building of the nation?"

A distinguished foreigner has said: "The only really cultural value one finds today in America is that of Virginia. The cultured men born in its field of force are responsible for most that is of cultural value in America. But how different Virginia is from other states? Its culture is a particular one; it is only a matter of age, but of kind as well." [14]

A very great part of the cultural forces of Virginia thus described, which have leavened America and given the country generally such value as it has, originated in, and went out from that part of Virginia known as the Southside.

THE GENESIS OF SOUTHWESTERN EXPANSION

There is evidence from an early time that the Virginians were more far visioned, respecting westward expansion, and more accurate envisioning the course of future events in that regard than were Carolinians. Thus, for example, in October, 1728, when the Commissioners of Virginia, and those of North Carolina had run the dividing line from "Coratuck Inlet" only one hundred and seventy miles, or to a little west of the present line between Mecklenburg and Halifax Counties, Virginia, the North Carolina Commissioners quit, and went home, and co-operate in running the line any farther westward, claiming that at the point the line had reached "near 50 Miles without the Inhabitants: that in their opinion there would be no need to run it farther for or Two." [15]

How little did they guess correctly the course of immigration "an age or two," and how much more prophetic was the vision of Colonel William Byrd! Commenting upon the views of the North Carolina Commissioners, Colonel Byrd wrote:

"And tho' the distance toward the Mountain be not precisely determined . . . yet surely the West Line shou'd be carry'd as near to the Mountain as possible, that both the Land of the King, & of the Lords may be taken up the faster, & that his Majesty's Subjects may as soon as possible expose themselves to that Natural Barrier. This they will do in a very short time when they know distinctly in which Government they may enter the

they have already done in the more Northern Parts of Virginia, So strange the Carolina Commissioners shou'd affirm, that the distance of 50 Miles beyond the Inhabitants shou'd be sufficient to carry the Line an Age or two, especially considering that a few days before the signing of this protest, Astrable [16] had taken up near 2000 Acres of Land, and settled themselves within 5 Miles of the Place where they left us. Besides the goodness of the soil in those Parts, & the fondness of the People to take up Land, we may venture to foretell, with the Spirit of Divinatum [divination] that there will be many settlements higher than these Gentlemen went in less than ten years, & perhaps that time." [17]

Colonel Byrd's prediction was fulfilled within a short term of and in much less than the "Age or two" mentioned by the Carolina Commissioners all that great area was settled and an enormous number of inhabitants had rolled on over the mountains, and across the streams to the South and Southwest.

The opening up of that part of the Colony of Virginia, embracing a vast expanse of ancient Lunenburg, was the result, in the main, of the influences; the desire of the Colony to expand its settled areas, thrusting back the Indian frontier and affording greater security to thickly settled communities; and the desire of great numbers of residents as well as immigrants to secure cheaper, newer and therefore more fertile lands, as well as to escape, so far as possible, the burden of taxation.

Colonel William Byrd, in his observations as Commissioner from 1729 to 1733 to fix the boundary line between Virginia and North Carolina was the first to call general public attention to the fertility and desirability of the territory of the original Lunenburg area for settlement.

His explorations and observations came at an opportune time.

Lands in the older parts of the colonies are becoming more expensive and taxes were no inconsiderable item. And that state of things was confined to Virginia, the richest, most favored colony of that era:

 [16] Colonel Byrd's name for William Mayo, in The Secret History of the

The land policy of Pennsylvania, the land of the benevolent Wm. Penn, was not formulated entirely without consideration of revenue. The incoming Colonists thought the rent charges very high; and the prices there increased. In 1719 the charges were ten pounds and ten shillings quit-rents per hundred acres. In 1732 the scale had risen to fifteen pounds ten shillings per hundred acres with a quit-rent of one penny per acre.

In furtherance of a Southwestern Expansion policy in 1738 the Assembly of Virginia passed an act designed to encourage the settlement of the lands lying upon Roanoke River "on the Southern boundary of the Colony," which lands the act declared were "for the most part uncultivated."

The Act provided: "That all and every person and persons whatsoever, within ten years next after the passage of this act, shall settle themselves into this Colony, and settle upon Roanoke river above the south branch of the same, above the fork thereof; and on the branch of the said river, above the mouth of Little Roanoke otherwise called Licking Hole; including all the lands on all the said branches and the lands lying between them, now deemed to be in the County of Lunenburg and parish of St. Andrew, shall be exempted from the payment of county and parish levies, until the expiration of the said ten years; and shall be at liberty, at all times hereafter, to pay and discharge all taxes and fees wherewith they shall be chargeable, in current money, at the rate of three farthings per pound for tobacco, without deduction; and after the expiration of that time, shall be at liberty to pay and discharge their public, county and parish levies in current money, at the same rate." [18]

The exemptions of this Act applied to all the territory later included into Lunenburg County, except that part embraced in the present Lunenburg County, Mecklenburg County and about a third of the County of Charlotte. It extended to the territory now embraced in Halifax, Pittsylvania, Henry, Patrick and Franklin, almost the whole of Brunswick and Campbell, about two-thirds of Charlotte County, and a part of Appomattox [18] Hening, 57-8; the act is also set out in full in The Old State, I, 132-133.

The attractiveness of the exemptions provided by this legislation was evidenced by the great influx of immigrants into the territory thus favored. They came from almost every quarter.

The rapidity of the settlement of the territory is indicated by the following outstanding facts, such as that within seven years there was a population of such numbers in the new section so remote from Brunswick County that a new County, Lunenburg, had to be created, [19] and this area was subdivided into new counties as follows: Halifax in 1752, Bedford in 1754; Charlotte and Mecklenburg in 1765 and Pittsylvania in 1767.

After the great western domain of Lunenburg had been cut off into Halifax and Bedford, and while the mother county still retained the territory later erected into Charlotte and Mecklenburg Counties, the population of the county became so great that the county was subdivided into three parishes, Cornwall Parish being formed in 1757, and Spotsylvania Parish being created in 1761. These parishes were co-extensive with the areas later laid off into Charlotte and Mecklenburg Counties respectively.

About the time of the passage of the Act above mentioned embodied a ten year exemption from certain taxes for settlers upon the Roanoke. Granville's agents were "disposing of desirable lands in the piedmont region of North Carolina to settlers at the rate of three shillings per acre of proclamation money for six hundred and forty acres . . . and was making large free grants on the condition of seating a certain proportion of settlers." [20]

Many of those originally settling the exempted Lunenburg territory remained and became the permanent inhabitants of the area, and the rest of the successive new counties erected from that territory; others moved for a time and then pressed on into the south and southwest. In fact, for or all of the children of some of the first settlers moved on into the newer country. Sometimes they emigrated by families and groups of friends, and it would be difficult to find a Southside family which did not [19] It was created by an Act of March 26, 1745, the County to be known as the County of Halifax, and its existence on and after May 1st, 1746. V. Hening, 383-385; Free State, I, 135-137.

or later contribute its quota of sons and daughters to the moving population which flowed on into the south and southwest. Some moved in another direction going to the northwestward, into Augusta and then eventually into the Ohio country by that route; but a great wave of emigration rolled southward into North Carolina, both into what is the present state of that name, and into what is now Tennessee, and westward into Kentucky and southward and westward into Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Louisiana; as well as into South Carolina.

Georgia; and many went the more direct route into the Kentucky country by the famous Wilderness Trail, or road.

ROUTES SOUTHWARD FROM VIRGINIA

From an early time there had been avenues of intercourse between Virginia and North Carolina. The commerce of Virginia was earlier and better organized; and Virginia had a far better and more stable government than did her sister colony to the south.

In the beginning these trade channels were opened up between the whites and the Indians of North Carolina. As early as 1650 Edward Bland and Abraham Wood made a tour from Fort Henry on the Appomattox, where Petersburg now stands, to the Roanoke, in the interest of the Indians. There is extant a record of their travels, but as they used new and unfamiliar names for streams and natural features of the country, which have not survived, the route they traveled can be only approximately followed. They crossed what is now Dinwiddie and Brunswick Counties; progressed as far as Roanoke Rapids, or Clarkesville.[21]

Returning they passed through the present Lunenburg and Nottoway Counties.

Other traders following, in general, this route doubtless developed trade with the North Carolina Indians, before [21] There is some difference of opinion as to the point they reached; it was very probably Roanoke Rapids.

Governor Spotswood's time. Shortly after 1710 he built Fort Christ Church, established an Indian school at that point.[22]

This fort was established on the Meherrin River, in the present county of Brunswick, just east of the Lunenburg County line. It was, when established, several days' journey into the interior from the seacoast of the State.

In regulation of the Indian trade Governor Spotswood secured in 1714 of a law which incorporated "The Indian Company," and prohibited all trade with the Indians in Virginia, both tributary and 'Foreign'.

be carried on at one place only, Christanna on the Meherrin River market, by agents of the Company, which was given a strict monopoly trade, for twenty years.

The plan of trade provided for in the Act was never very effective the law was repealed a few years later. But it had the effect of making Fort Christanna a foregathering place for many Indians, and a node on the trading paths. Indian commodities in large quantities were brought hither by the Catawhas, the Tuscaroras and other of the Southern

The mention in extant records of fords across the Roanoke and the many licenses granted to ferry owners to operate ferries on these rivers, attest to a degree the extent of communications at that period between Southside Virginia and the country to the southwest. They indicate the many avenues by which access to the southern country

Colonel William Byrd in his history of the Dividing Line mentions the Indian Trading Path, which ran from North Carolina northward into Virginia, crossing the Roanoke River, at about the western limits of Brunswick County.

One influence which contributed mightily to the creation of new trails from North Carolina into Virginia was the superior shipping facilities of the latter colony especially for tobacco. Those paths from North Carolina so situated as to make it more convenient for them to reach the main rivers of Virginia, and the Chesapeake, patronized which led them hither -- and this to the extent possible, despite the fact that Virginia levied an import tax upon North Carolina tobacco, brought into the Colony. The trade from North Carolina was not uncommon. [23]

The Great Trading Path leading from Southside Virginia to the west, to the Catawhas and other Southern Indians, crossed the Roanoke, and proceeding southerly crossed the Yadkin at the Trading Ford about 10 miles southeast of Salisbury, North Carolina. The road from Petersburg, Tavern (in the present Dinwiddie County), crossing the Nottoway 1 Cross' Bridge (on the line between the present Lunenburg and Not Counties), thence to North Meherrin River, crossing it at Hawkin the South Meherrin River at Barry's Bridge and thence to Skipwitl on the Roanoke, and thence southward into North Carolina, was one notable roads by which uncounted numbers, from the valleys of the of the Appomattox, and from a wide expanse of the Southside, tra North Carolina, and to other southern destinations.

The route which General Washington, while President, traveled famous southern tour, and by which he went from Richmond to Pete: thence to Halifax, North Carolina, and on to Charlotte and the S followed substantially a route traveled ever since communication: the two sections began. He returned by a route roughly paralleli former, and westward of it, through Southside Virginia.[24]

[23] Referring to the practice of smuggling tobacco by North Caro living adjacent to the Virginia line, about 1728, Colonel W wrote: "They roll it in the Night to Nansimond River, in De: the Law against bringing of Tobacco out of Carolina into Vi: but Colonel Byrd seems to justify, in a measure, the conduc Carolinians, for he adds: "but 'twere unreasonable to expec shou'd obey the Laws of their Neighbours, who pay no regard own." ROUTES INTO THE SOUTHWEST

The route into the West which afterward became the Wilderness had its beginning at an unchronicled date. It was, doubtless, at large part traveled by some of the "Long Hunters," such as Elisha (sometimes erroneously spelled Wallen), before anyone contemplated permanent settlement in the Kentucky country ever undertook to make its passage.

The general route of this trail was traveled by Dr. Thomas Wallen in 1749, the first explorer into the Kentucky country to chronicle his travels. At the time of beginning his explorations he was a resident of Albemarle County, Virginia.

In time the Wilderness Road became the most noted route to the West. It has become "in song and story" one of the most famous roads, of which the annals afford any record.

The Wilderness Road is shown on Thomas Speed's map as beginning at Philadelphia, and running westward in Pennsylvania to the Blue Ridge, crossing this range, and thence southwestward from Pennsylvania to Maryland, and down the valley of Virginia between the Blue Ridge and Alleghany Mountains to "Ft. Chissel" (should be Fort Chiswell), at the junction with the other branch of the Wilderness Road, indicated as running from Richmond, Virginia, to Fort Chiswell, in Virginia, on the James River. From this point westward the route is represented as running westward to Cumberland Gap and thence westward into Kentucky.

Speed mentions the road from Philadelphia to Fort Pitt, thence to the Ohio River and down that river as another route of travel into the West country, and records the opinion of Captain Imlay that, especially with much baggage, the "best and most expeditious way to Kentucky" was "the Wilderness," rather than by way of Pittsburg and the Ohio, as used by travelers from Philadelphia and Baltimore. After describing the route from Philadelphia and Richmond to their converging point, at [25] The Wilderness Road, by Thomas Speed, J. P. Morton & Co., Louisville, Ky., 1886, a Filson Club paper, contains a most interesting description of this famous route. The Speed family was prominent in the early days of Lunenburg, Mecklenburg and Caswell Counties. Thomas Speed's grandfather emigrated from Charlotte, Virginia, to Kentucky.

Fort Chissel he says: "Thus were brought together two tides of in

These two roads converged, according to Speed, at the blockhouse by Colonel William Byrd in 1758 just after the Americans took Fort from the French. It was then an extreme outpost of the white man, of course, intended as a barrier against the Western Indians, especially the Cherokees. It was one of a line of forts on the frontier of to the west, erected in the era of the Colonial Wars against the and the French. [26]

Of Fort Chissel (Chiswell) Speed says: "It was an outpost in wilderness of the West, yet from the point where it stood to Cumberland was nearly two hundred miles. It is a point of great interest in the Kentucky immigration. It was there the immigrants reached the of the great Wilderness.' From the Potomac to New River along the travel was not attended with difficulty or danger of any consequence wild, rough and dangerous part of the journey commenced when New crossed at Inglis' [Ingle's] Ferry, and the travelers turned square toward the setting sun to make their way across the mountains and through the 'uninhabited country'." [27]

The Wilderness trace, originally a long hunter's trail, by the between 1770 and 1780 had become so important a route into the Kentucky country that the Legislature of Virginia, in 1779, lent the aid of State to opening it up more adequately for travel. It passed an act directing Evan Shelby and Richard Calloway "to explore the country to and on both sides the Cumberland mountains, and to trace out, the most convenient road from the settlements on the east side of mountains, over the same, into the open country, in the said country Kentucky; and to cause such road, with all convenient despatch, to be opened and cleared in such manner as to give passage to travelers on horse, for the present, and report their proceedings therein to the next session of Assembly." [28] Shelby re:

act under the appointment and the work of locating and clearing devolved upon Calloway.

The author of The Wilderness Road, while he goes into no detail, was aware that the tide of emigration westward over the Wildcat Trail received accessions from the North Carolina country. He says: "Besides the road which passed along the valley of Virginia, and which ran out from Richmond to the intersection at New River, there were other traveled ways or traces which led up to Cumberland Gap from the Carolinas and through the mountains of East Tennessee." [29]

Again he says: "From Virginia and the Carolinas all the immigrants naturally entered Kentucky by Cumberland Gap." [30]

All of this was true enough, but does not, nor does any other so far as investigation has disclosed, call attention to the tide of immigration which flowed from Virginia into North Carolina, and thence into Kentucky and the West. These Virginians in large Transcriber's Note: Apart from identifying misspelled words in Part 1, the transcriber has not altered the text. Any words that are not clearly marked as being those of the transcriber are either those of the author or of a work of the author. The names in the tithe lists have been rendered precisely as found in the published text. It must be stressed that any suggestions as to alternative spellings or questioning that occur in the tithe lists are those of the author.

The full text is presented in this transcript with the exception of the index. Each year is contained in its own file.

Footnotes are rendered in brackets; page numbers are rendered in braces. Any parenthetical text has been rendered using the brackets or parentheses that appear in the published text.

Between pp. 58 and 59 of the published text appears a fold-out map of Lunenburg County as existed in 1748, overlaid with the tithe subdivisions and the counties that were created from the territory of Lunenburg county. A textual report of the map, together with explanatory text, is Part 2 at the end of page 58, but prior to the list of tithes.

CHAPTER TWO

LIST OF TITHES, LUNENBURG COUNTY, VIRGINIA 1748, 1749, 1750, 1751

The lists of tithes for the years 1748, 1749, 1750 and 1751 embrace the entire area of ancient Lunenburg or the whole of the County, before it suffered any loss of territory, by the subdivision of its area into counties. In other words, these lists embrace the census of tithes for the area which is now embraced in whole or in part in eleven counties. These counties are Lunenburg, Mecklenburg, Charlotte, Halifax, Pittsylvania, Henry, Patrick, Franklin, Campbell, Bedford and Appomattox. Campbell and Bedford Counties embrace a little territory not originally within Lunenburg, while only about a fourth of the area of Appomattox is from territory originally within Lunenburg County.

It is believed that all the lists for all these years except 1751 have been found, and are embraced herein. Only four lists for 1751 have been discovered. There were almost certainly four, and very probably five lists for this year, which have not been found.

A map of the County as it was when organized in 1746, and as it existed in 1748, is herewith presented. It is laid off into precincts for the purpose of tithes that year. The boundaries of these precincts cannot be stated with exact certainty, but from a study of the map and the brief descriptions in the orders designating the territory within which each justice should take the lists, an approximation of the boundaries of the precincts has been attempted. It is felt they are, at least, accurate enough to serve their purpose.

The designation of these precincts indicates that the most thorough populated area of Lunenburg County at that time was that section Roanoke River westward to Falling Creek, and that probably the most thickly settled part of that territory lying upon the watershed of Meherrin River.

The site of John Phelps' precinct from Falling River westward that this was sparsely settled; and this was true in greater degree of the precinct of Cornelius Cargill. Theoretically his precinct embraced presumably, all the territory from Butcher's Creek westward, and from the Forks of Roanoke (and Dan) rivers, and from the North Carolina line northward to the boundaries of other precincts, and westward to the western boundary of the County. But probably such inhabitants as were then in the territory were clustered in and about "the fork" of the river. There were probably a few persons then resident in what is now Patrick, Henry, Franklin and a considerable part of Halifax Counties.

By reference to this map, the designation of precincts in later years and to the list of Tithables of the several precincts in these later years one can appreciate the extent of the influx of population into this section. There was an enormous surge of immigration from the valley of the James, from the eastward; in fact, from all the older parts of Virginia as well as from Maryland and Pennsylvania. The waves of this tide of immigrants flowed in and filled the land, many making but a temporary pause. As already pointed out, these pioneers and their children and countless thousands passed on into North Carolina, and into the territory that is now Kentucky; they helped to populate South Carolina and they furnished a large percentage of the inhabitants of Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Texas, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois; and more or less still all of the newer parts of the United States.

Representation of Map

Transcriber's Note: Here is a representation of the map referred to by the author, with an explanation following to indicate the counties overlaid in the original map for each precinct appointed to take the list of tithes. This being only a rough approximation, the researcher is referred to the original for a more accurate representation.

Transcriber's Note: Apart from identifying misspelled words in Part 1, the transcriber has not altered the text. Any words not clearly marked as being those of the transcriber are either those of the author or of a work of the author. The names in the tithe lists have been rendered precisely as found in the published version. It must be stressed that any suggestions as to alternative spellings or questioning that occur in the tithe lists are those of the author.

The full text is presented in this transcript with the exception of the index. Each year is contained in its own file.

Footnotes are rendered in brackets; page numbers are rendered in braces. Any parenthetical text has been rendered using the brackets or parentheses that were used in the published text.

Between pp. 58 and 59 of the published text appears a fold-out map of Lunenburg County as it existed in 1748, overlaid with the tithe subdivisions and the counties that were created from the territory of Lunenburg county. A textual description of the map, together with explanatory text, is in Part 2 at the end of page 58, but prior to the list of tithes. 1749

No copyright notice was printed in the publication.

At June Court, 1749, the appointments to take the list of tithes were made as follows:

Nicholas Hayle (Haile), "from Goose Creek to the extent of the County downwards."

Matthew Talbot, "from Falling River to Goose Creek."

William Caldwell, "from Falling River to Little Ronoke River."

Hugh Lawson, "from Hounds Creek to the extent of the County downwards."

Lyddall Bacon, "from Hounds Creek to Little Ronoke River."

William Howard, "from Butchers Creek to the extent of the County downwards."

Cornelius Cargil, "in the fork and from Butchers Creek to Little Ronoke River, and beyond Dan River."

For this year, 1749, all the lists have been found. They are as follows:

Transcriber's Note: Apart from identifying misspelled words in Part 4, the transcriber has not altered the text. Any words not clearly marked as being those of the transcriber are either those of the author or of a work of the author. The names in the tithe lists have been rendered precisely as found in the published version. It must be stressed that any suggestions as to alternative spellings or questioning that occur in the tithe lists are those of the author.

The full text is presented in this transcript with the exception of the index. Each year is contained in its own file.

in the published text.

Between pp. 58 and 59 of the published text appears a fold-out map of Lunenburg County as it existed in 1748, overlaid with the tithe subdivisions and the counties that were created from the territory of Lunenburg county. A textual reproduction of the map, together with explanatory text, appears in Part 2 at the end of page 58, but prior to the list of tithes.

No copyright notice was printed in the published text.

At July Court, 1750, the Court made the appointments of list tithables, and defined their precincts as follows:

Hugh Lawson, "from the County line to North Maherrin."

Abraham Martin, "from Blew Stone to Little Roanoke."

William Caldwell, "from Little Roanoke up the Fork."

John Phelps, "from Falling River to Goose Creek."

Nicholas Hayle (Haile), "from Goose Creek to the extent of the County upwards."

William Howard, "from the lower end of the County line on the North Maherrin to the Fork."

Cornelius Cargill, "from the Fork to the upper line of the County."

The lists returned by all these parties have been found.

In addition to lists by all the above named list takers, there were also lists, for this year, taken and returned by Lyddall Bacon and Richard Witton. [1]

[1] The difficulty of deciphering the correct spelling of this name led to some confusion. The writer has certified copies of certain documents where apparently this same individual's name was read by the experienced and efficient clerk as "Wilton" and "Welton." In Free State, Vol. I, page 333, "Richard Wilton" is listed as Justice of the Old Colonial County Court from 1750-1765, and the writer is directed to the variant spelling of "Wilton" and "Welton." The writer's examination of several original documents, some of which show the name as presumably written by the man himself, leads to the conclusion that the correct rendering of the name is "Witton".

Transcriber's Note: Apart from identifying misspelled words in Part 1, the transcriber has not altered the text. Any words not clearly marked as being those of the transcriber are either those of the author or of a work of the author. The names in the tithe lists have been rendered precisely as found in the published version. It must be stressed that any suggestions as to alternative spellings or questioning that occur in the tithe lists are those of the author.

The full text is presented in this transcript with the exception of the index. Each year is contained in its own file.

in the published text.

Between pp. 58 and 59 of the published text appears a fold-out map of Lunenburg County as existed in 1748, overlaid with the tithes and the counties that were created from the territory of Lunenburg county. A textual report of the map, together with explanatory text, is Part 2 at the end of page 58, but prior to the list of tithes.

No copyright notice was printed in the published text.

At May Court, 1751, Field Jefferson[1] was appointed a list taker in place of William Howard, who had died, and with that substitution he appointed "the same gentlemen as were appointed last year [to] take the lists in their several precincts."

The lists discovered for this year, 1751, are those taken by:

Lyddall Bacon,
Field Jefferson,
Hugh Lawson,
Richd. Witton

It is certain that several lists for this year have not been discovered.

Those above mentioned are as follows:

Transcriber's Note: Apart from identifying misspelled words in Part 6, the transcriber has not altered the text. Any words that are not clearly marked as being those of the transcriber are either those of the author or of a work cited by the author. The names in the tithe lists have been rendered precisely as found in the published version. It must be stressed that any suggestions as to alternative spellings or questioning that occur in the tithe lists are those of the author.

The full text is presented in this transcript with the exception of the index. Each year is contained in its own file.

rendered using the brackets or parentheses that appear in the published text.

Between pp. 58 and 59 of the published text appears a fold-out map of Lunenburg County as it existed in 1748, overlaid with the tithe subsections and the counties that were created from the territory of Lunenburg county. A textual reproduction of the map, together with explanatory text, appears in Part 2 at the end of page 58, but prior to the list of tithes.

CHAPTER III

LISTS OF TITHES, LUNENBURG COUNTY, VIRGINIA 1752, 1764, 1769

The lists embraced in this chapter are not all of the lists available for the period, 1752-1769. Lists for other years of the period are of limited existence. But the reproduction of the lists for every year would result in great duplication of the names. It has, therefore, seemed advisable to attempt to reproduce the lists for all years, but only to give titles for certain years at close enough intervals to assure a reasonably complete list of the residents of the section, so far as such lists afford information, from 1752 to 1769 inclusive.

The lists embraced in this chapter are interesting, for they cover a period during which the county of Lunenburg was several times subdivided. In 1752 Halifax County was cut off from Lunenburg, [1] while in 1764 it was formed, [2] and in 1765 both Charlotte and Mecklenburg Counties were created. [3] The lists, therefore, for 1769 were taken after Lunenburg County had suffered all these diminutions of territory.

For the years 1752 and 1753 no orders designating the tithe-towns have been found.

But for 1752 what is probably a complete set of all the lists for that year [sic], have been discovered. For this year, 1752, lists

Lyddall Bacon,
William Caldwell,
Cornelius Cargill,

- [1] _Hening_, VI, 252.
[2] _Hening_, VI, 381.
[3] _Hening_, VIII, 41.

Field Jefferson,
Hugh Lawson,
John Phelps, and Richd. Witton

have been found, in excellent state of preservation.
